B.A./B.S. in Political Science

Political Science: Program Overview

At OSU-Cascades, students can pursue a Political Science major with a combination of in-person and online (OSU E-campus) classes.

Political Science is the systematic study of politics wherever it takes place—in governmental institutions, the international arena, and civil society. Political science majors at Oregon State may choose the general political science major, or one of the three options that focus on law and politics, international affairs, or environmental and energy politics. All political science majors learn to think critically, write clearly and speak persuasively. They learn the ideas of great political thinkers, learn the political fundamentals behind the headlines, and have engaging discussions from all points of view with other students and professors.

To complete a Bachelor of Arts (B.A.) or Bachelor of Science (B.S.) in Political Science students must complete the following degree requirements:

- OSU Graduation Requirements
 - Baccalaureate Core
 - College of Liberal Arts Core

Potential for Learning Outside the Classroom

Political science majors are strongly encouraged to pursue experiential learning and other educational opportunities outside of the classroom, and these experiences can be used to fulfill some political science graduation requirements. Such experiences can include research, projects, practicum or internship. Credits will be placed in the appropriate PS 401–PS 410 designator.

A maximum of 8 credits from any combination of PS 401–PS 410 may be applied to the major, although additional credits from courses in this range may be applied to general graduation requirements.

Additional experiential learning opportunities include "field schools" and study abroad. Student should discuss all of these opportunities with the political science undergraduate advisor and the Coordinator of Experiential Learning.
